The Culture Festival arc of MHA, probably due to it having no LOV presence, is one of the most misunderstood, and unfairly slandered arcs in the series. It is most certainly a quintessential MHA arc and I'm here to talk about why.

The main thing I'm going to address here is the misuse of the word "filler" when referring to this arc. Fillers actual definition is content that wasn't in the manga, but most people don't use it like that. They usually mean nothing is gained or lost from the arc and is skippable

The Culture Festival is absolutely not skippable, if that wasn't clear. Not only does it introduce one of MHA's best villains, it contains progression for Midoriya and his hero ideology that you still feel to this day, character development, and new methods of heroism.
